

Fleeing to the Tent of Jael

Oh how I long to refresh and revive.
I've been overtaken and I'm trying to survive.
I will flee away, I must make my escape.
I'm running for my life. I must find refuge before it's too late.
To Jael, to Jael , to Jael I will run.
I am an evil spirit that enjoys killing anyone who seeks to please God or stay in His will.
I hate the righteousness and truth, I hate Christians with zeal.
I want to kill, corrupt, steal and throw down
a Christian's desire to turn lost souls around.
I want you to be a slave, your heart I want to thrust with a blade of deception, selfishness and lust.
So come here, come here, come here, come here to you I say.
I want you to hear my words and my voice obey.
But I can't trick you because you're like that warrior Jael who is keenly discerning my actions and won't listen to my appeal.
She wants to eliminate wicked forces that grab God's people by the neck.
She's prayed up, she's prepared, her heart is virtuous and set.
Into her tent I will desperately go and face the wrath of my determined foe.
I have been slain and my comrades will be killed too
at the hands of Jaels who are committed to pull through:
committed to pull through all the church politics and carnality galore,
the perception of a staggering ministry, and hopes that have been smashed to the floor.
She is willing to focus and set her mind straight.
She refuses to allow evil forces to taunt her or obliterate the promises God has made to her, to those she will hold true.
She evicts the nuisances that wrongfully tell her what to do.
She focuses and keeps her eyes on Him.
As she waits for her Savior her light won't dim.
Prayerful, anointed with a heart that is set,
she is maturing and her character won't fret.
She's going to get her victory in Jesus' name.
Jael is a warrior who has been prepared, her hands aren't lame.
So watch out wicked forces, you'd better stay on the run.
Jael is seeking you and she's already won.
