

For A Little While

For a little while our church is on fire.
For a little while we seek after God's desire.

Maybe for a sermon, or, for a week or two,
then we submit to complacency's cue.

We stay the same, we make the same promises again.
Again, again, again, empty words to God we vend.

When are we going to get tired of being in the same place?
When will our faith increase and our lustful desires be abased?

When will we let go of the superficial values of this world?
When we truly fear that our gates will be flames and not pearled?

For a little while revival sets our pace.
For a little while we pursue repentance not just grace.

So we have to stop going through the motions and completely yield
our heart,
to doing things His way beyond the lip service mark.

We have to let go of sin and do what He says do.
For longer than a little while we have to be faithful and true.
